Sermon Introduction

We are invited as we gather today to remember Jesus' final meal with His disciples, which is the origin of our central Christian practice of communion. All who have or who seek faith in God in the way of Christ are welcomed to this table.

Jesus welcomed his disciples with open arms. He set a place for them at his table. He accepted them as they were and challenged them to be better. He even called the one who would betray him his friend. Even though each of them would utterly fail him, he washed their feet. There were no conditions for their participation in this meal. They came to the table and experienced his deep and profound love for them. Without condition. Without qualification. Without examination. Without a token. Without any limitation.

In a world overloaded with information, the Lord's Supper is the proclamation of the gospel in its most elemental form. Friends, we aren't perfect. We don't have it all figured out. We're failures and doubters and sinners. But so were the twelve, who long ago sat at the table from which boundless love flowed. There they were shown the wondrous love of God and the power of selfless service. There they were invited, against all odds, to go and do likewise. And so are we.

All who have or who seek faith in God in the way of Christ are welcomed to this table.

Amen.

Gilda Roddy
Pastor for Pastoral Care
